DAM NOTES

Interesting Items of the Work Being Carried On At Lock Dam No. 33
Mr. R. B. Lovell

Margaret McManaman
Work on Lock Dam No. 33 is at about a standstill due to the high stage of water in the river. Until the water recedes the work will necessarily proceed very slowly.

Frank Murphy
A cement hopper is being built in the northeast end of the cofferdam. This hopper will be used to hold cement when the work on the lock system is started.

Sluice gates have been made in the Myrtle Crane side of the cofferdam in order that the rapidly rising water may be let in gradually. To let it in all at once would be disastrous to the retaining walls of the cofferdam.

The derricks that have been erected James H. Ross, Jr.

In the bottom of the cofferdam are floating around in the water in the cofferdam. The sudden rise in the river lifted them off their tracks and tilted them to one side. They will have to be placed in position again.

The sudden rise in the Ohio has caused several of the workmen at the dam to be laid on the reserve list, and L. M. Chisholm at the present time only a few men are being kept busy.

All the towboats, derrick barges and cranes have tied up to the Kentucky shore until the waters recede; when they will assist in pumping out the cofferdam.

The pump boat that was used in pumping out the cofferdam is still in.

Mrs. S. Macey Humphreys
side the cofferdam, but the pumps are not working, as each gallon of water removed from the enclosure at the present time adds to the pressure from the outside on the retaining walls.

Friday afternoon about 1:30 o'clock a young man giving his name as H. P. Berry, aged 25, of Lexington, went into the wholesale liquor house of O. H. P. Thomas, on Market street, and purchased about $9 worth of whisky, tendering a check signed by his father, J. T. Berry, of Carlisle.

Clifford Thomas

The check called for $35 and the change was given him. A few moments later the check was taken to a bank and there the Carlisle institution was called over the phone to see if the check was good, but informed the local bank's officials that J. T. Berry had no funds in their bank.

The local police were notified and soon captured the young forger, just as he was ready to board a C. & O. westbound train for Cincinnati. He was taken to the police office, where he told the police that all the trouble arose over a mistake of his father's. The police got into communication with his father, who told them to send the check to the Carlisle bank and he would pay the money it called for and to hold the boy until he arrived. This was done and upon seeing his father the young man broke down and told the whole story.

The father arranged to have the young man taken from jail Saturday morning and left for his home.

GAME SUNDAY.

The local team, the Regulars, will hook up with the fast Feeney's All-professionals. This team is made up of the former big and minor league players around Cincinnati and is rated as one of the best around Cincinnati. Our boys have turned up considerably and with the help of Dold, the Cincinnati catcher, and Perkins, at short, every cog in the wheel is moving smoothly. Frost or McDonald will probably twirl for the locals and it goes without saying a good game is expected. So be there and help them along.

PROTECTION AND THE COST OF LIVING.

The argument which stood out more prominently than any other in the tariff controversy of the past several years was the contention of the Democrats that the prime influence on the cost of living was the tariff. They denounced the protective policy as a raid on the pantry of the workingman, and a tribute exacted from the very warp and woof of the clothing which he wore. Speaker Champ Clark was loud in proclaiming the protective tariff as the cause of the high cost of living and the first plank of the Democratic platform, adopted at the Baltimore convention, among other things, asserted that no substantial relief could be secured for the people without import duties on the necessities of life were materially reduced.

The first important act of the Democratic Congress was to tamper with the tariff and enact in place of the law under which this country had prospered for twenty years, the Underwood bill, which placed nearly every food product on the free list, and when the President signed the law on October 3, 1913 Mr. Underwood took occasion to remark that he had the utmost confidence in the new tariff law and that he was absolutely confident that it would reduce the cost of living, but unfortunately the predictions of Mr. Underwood have not been borne out by conditions immediately following the new tariff.

The administration has, upon several occasions, through the various departments, confessed its error, the most recent of which is contained in a retail price bulletin issued by the Department of Labor. An analysis of the bulletin states that in September 1914, the price of all food was 7.1 per cent higher than the average price for 1913, and goes on to say that for the eight years between 1907 and 1914, considering all food combined, the highest price was reached in 1914.

Fresh meats were placed on the free list by the Underwood law, since the enactment of which our imports from Argentina, Australia and Uruguay have reached astounding figures, and yet we are informed by the analysis that all meats were higher in 1914 than in any of the preceding seven years. The Department of Agriculture, in the "Crop Reports" shows that the prices received by raisers of food animals have declined since the enactment of the Underwood law, but the price to the consumer was, in 1914, the highest in seven years. The duty on sugar was reduced 25 per cent, and will come in free after May 1, 1916, and yet quotations from Williet & Gray's Sugar Trade Journal show that the refiners' wholesale cash price was 4.116 cents per pound on June 19, 1913, as against 4.214 cents on June 18, 1914. This 25 per cent reduction represented for the year ending March 1, last, a loss of revenue to the government of $18,000,000, and the consumer pays more for the product than when the government derived a revenue from it. The same is true of every other article on the free list, the government loses the revenue and the price is not one whit reduced to the consumer.

These are hard, cold facts brought to light by government reports and show that the cost of living advances as private business and government revenue decline and the foreign food producer gleefully pockets the free trade margin promised the consumer. The farmer's prices are set by his foreign competitor, and the laboring man is without the wherewithal to purchase from either.

Our French friend Pierre de Tanton says: "A frog is a peculiar little animal. When it sees down it stands up and when it runs it jumps."

UNITED STATES GIRLS WHO WED TITLES.

John W. Porter
Gladys Vanderbilt becomes Countess Szchenyi.

The Vanderbilt girls, backed by one of the best names in America, have been most unfortunate in their alliance with the foreign nobility, and scarcely less distressing has been the experience of Gladys Vanderbilt, who married the Hungarian nobleman, Count Laszlo Szchenyi, as was that of Consuelo, who became the Duchess of Marlborough.

Miss Gladys Moore Vanderbilt became the Countess Szchenyi on January 27, 1908. The wedding occurred in New York at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-eighth street, only 250 guests being in attendance.

Milton Russell

Miss Vanderbilt was introduced to society a few years before her wedding and from that time on rumor was busily engaged in marrying her to numberless young Americans as well as to an endless succession of titled foreigners, ranging from royalty to the latest impious nobility who happened to land on American shores.

At the time of the engagement of Phyllis Swisher

Miss Vanderbilt to Count Szchenyi, the Hungarian nobleman was practically unknown in this country. At the time of the wedding he was a handsome young fellow of 28, slender and straight, his bearing betraying his military training. He was the youngest of the four sons of Count

Harry Taylor
Enrich Szchenyi, a prominent Austro-Hungarian diplomat.

When he was married Count Laszlo had an annual income of $60,000, and owned both town and country estates, so that it was generally recognized that the match on the part of the foreigner was one of love, and there was no money settlement exacted.

The wedding ceremony was performed by Monsignor M. J. Lavelle, of St. Patrick's Cathedral. The bride's wedding gown was of white satin, which was trimmed with some superb point lace which had adorned her mother's bridal gown. Her attendants were her cousin, Miss Ruth Vanderbilt Twombly, Miss Dorothy Whiting, and her little niece, Miss Flora Payne Whitney.

The groom was attended as best man by Count Anton Sigray, the ushers being Count Stefan Szchenyi and Count Paul Esterhazy. The bride was given away by her brother, Cornelius Vanderbilt, whose conventional dress of an American gentleman was in striking contrast to the bright color of the military uniforms of the Hungarian groom and his friends.

Houston Hall

A wedding breakfast followed the ceremony and immediately following the bride and groom started upon their honeymoon trip, going by train to the Vanderbilt home at Newport.

Jessie Willocke,
R. L. "The Breakers," which had been prepared for them, and where they remained until February 4, when they sailed for Europe.

No American heiress in the long list of those who have participated in an international marriage has ever yet approached the record which Gladys Vanderbilt made in the line of raiment, having spent, it was estimated close to $200,000 for a trousseau. She could well afford the outlay, for at the time of her marriage she was in possession of her share of the Vanderbilt estate, $12,500,000, and since the marriage this has been greatly increased, and in spite of the many James Seeley losses she sustained through her husband's unfortunate speculations, she remains one of the richest women in the world.

There was considerable romance in the meeting of the American girl and

Sally Cummings
the Hungarian count. It was at a watering place in Salzburg. The two fell in love with each other in short order. The count's relatives were told of it and Miss Vanderbilt was requested to come in the midsummer to the home of the Szchenyi family in the district of Horpreck, Hungary.

Mrs. William Daugherty

At a family gathering there the young American heiress was formally betrothed under the laws of Austria-Hungary. Then Miss Vanderbilt resumed her journey. Upon her return Mrs. Hiram Daugherty to America she was followed by the count, who was entertained at "The Bremers." There the arrangements were completed and the engagement announced.

Count Szchenyi's family is one of the oldest in Austria-Hungary. So far as lineage goes, probably none of the Col. Robert Willett titled foreigners who have married American women can boast of a longer line of ancestors than Count Laszlo. Beside his family tree, that of the Duke of Marlborough, who married Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, is the veriest sapling.

King Willett
The Szchenyi name goes back fully 1,000 years. The men of the family have borne the title of count for more than 300 years. Like their ancestors, the wealth of the present family lies in the ownership of land.

The young count's father owned thousands of acres of land, divided into scores of farms and forest preserves.

Charles Lloyd
According to Hungarian standards the Szchenyi's are very rich and powerful.

When the American girl reached Hungary, her marriage carried with it the opening to her of the great houses of Vienna and the Imperial court, and Budapest offered her a
